Market Leading T&G and Clic Systems

Premium Underlay available

Traditional Tongue & Groove

Tongue and groove will allow for natural movement of the floor over time, reducing any squeaking or noise caused by walking. Depending on the thickness (above 17.5 millimetres), T&G flooring can be installed over joists as well as subfloors. And because of the glue, it will have more resistance to any spills from accidents, or fluctuations in moisture levels.

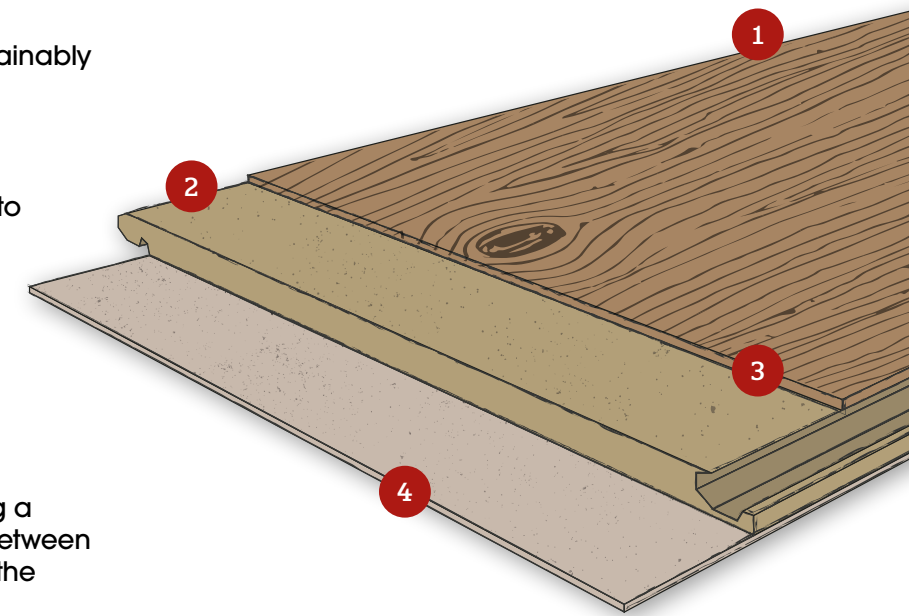

Clic System

The Clic System is deemed to be more DIY-friendly due to its simplicity in regards to being fitted. In principle, it is similar to the tongue and groove system in that the boards slot together like a jigsaw, however the difference is that when you slot the boards together, they click and lock in place due to the hook-like structure, removing the need for glue or nails to lay the floor.

Structure

- 1 High Quality European Veneers
Our floors come with high-quality, sustainably sourced oak veneers with thicknesses from 2.5-6.0mm.
- 2 Bevelled Edge
Each plank features a bevelled edge to each side of the board. This feature outlines the board's unique character and styling.
- 3 Choice of Clic or T&G Systems
Market leading licensed systems from Valinge & Unilin.
- 4 Strong & Stable
Our engineered floors are made using a high-quality multiply construction of between three and eight layers depending on the finished thickness.

Underfloor Heating

It is recommended to use engineered wood flooring with underfloor heating. Solid hardwood flooring is more susceptible to natural expansion when exposed to changes in temperature and should not be used when the required heat output is high. If not installed properly, the temperature fluctuations can cause the boards to warp and crack. Engineered wood, on the other hand, because of its softer plywood core, does not expand or move as much with climate fluctuations.
